Note from the Editorial Board

On the publication of the third issue

Appearing twice a year, Sojourn provides an open-access platform for publication of the diverse research and writing that students of English-taught bachelor programs in the Netherlands produce. Student authors who publish here reach an audience wider than that of their own program, generating greater meaning for their academic work.

In preparing this third issue, we were again encouraged by enthusiastic response from student writers in various stages of their academic career, from first-semester to almost-graduate. This issue contains four of the best of the many submissions that we received, and reflects undergraduate research in the humanities (linguistics), social sciences (anthropology), and natural sciences (astrobiology and medical science).

We would like to take this opportunity to recognize the critical contribution of our reviewers, whose efforts are indispensable for this publication; the names of colleagues who reviewed submissions for this issue are listed on page 5. The increasing number of English-taught undergraduate programs in the Netherlands encourages us to hope that future issues will include contributions from an even wider range of institutions. We look forward to hearing from people interested in reviewing for future issues, as well as student authors with academic work suitable for publication in Sojourn.
